World-class Kiwi artists stand tall among giants

Peter Dornauf, Waikato Times, December 11th, 2016

The Wallace Gallery in Morrinsville might be located in a small rural town, but it punches above its weight, holding its own with world-class exhibitions. A recent show of glass works from the New Zealand Society of Artists in Glass, was an eye-opener. Glass has come of age, displaying a real sophistication of forms and ideas. Standout pieces for me were works by Shelley Witters, called "Still Life with Bottles", which morphed the image of a bottle with that of the human figure. Simple but evocative. Richard Landers did optically engaging things with thick slabs of the material. Christine Cathie drew a startling calligraphic line in orange glass while Karen Barr treated the theme of conservation in arresting abstract ways.

"A Promise of Spring", Christine Cathie (Milford Gallery)

Art Seen, James Dignan, Otago Daily Times, 8 October 2015

Christine Cathie's cast-glass sculptures are a sensual delight.

Her distinct, harp-shaped forms feature gentle gradations and fluid whorls of colour, shifting and blending into and through each other. The works are meticulously created through a lost wax casting method, a laborious and unforgiving process, yet one which the artist handles with dexterity.

Colour is added in distinct layers, producing works which seem to breathe with the subtle beauty of polished gemstones. The surfaces of the sculptures alternate between acid-etched translucence and severely hand-polished transparency, the resulting combinations playing with each other and the surrounding light sources.

The strong, slender forms and the glints and shadows cast by the works enhance the gem-like quality of the pieces, transforming them into jewels on some giant stage set.

The colour combinations of the works have deliberately been chosen to reflect the turning seasons.

The rich russets and ambers of Shimmer and Midday and the deep greens of Bush morning sit beautifully alongside the glacial white of Thaw and the airy blues and greens of Atmosphere and Meadow.

The gradual changes of shade, the contrasting surface textures, and the sheer organic beauty of the ovoid forms combine in works which almost demand to be touched and caressed.
